

JERSEY BOY LOSES HIMSELF AND 'MA'

Big Buildings Daze Ten-Year-
Old Willie McCrum on First Trip to City.

FOUND IN BROOKLYN.

Lad Got on Wrong Ferry-Boat
During Wanderings Without Older Courier.

Willie McCrum's first visit to New York was a failure. He was to see the circus and the big buildings and the great stores and have the time of his life—a life that has run for ten years in Paterson, N. J., without notable event. He had earned this big trip and looked forward to it with great anticipation for weeks. His mother told him to be a good boy and get high marks at school and he could come to New York and meet her while she was visiting here. It was a bargain.

Willie jumped in and bargained till the other boys wondered. He wouldn't even discuss going "on the hook," let the day be ever so fine. He recited with promptness and ease, and the teacher put figures close to the hundred on all his papers. So he came to New York yesterday, with $5.00 in his knickerbockers and a return ticket stored away in his little cap. His father, Henry, took him to the train, after little sister Isabelle and Lizzy had kissed him an "eternally goodby."

The train was interesting, as was the scenery it rolled off, and Willie watched it all. He didn't think he had got started until they were telling everybody to see off—New York was at hand.

Tried to Find His Mother.

Willie had full instructions about getting on the ferry-boat and to the city across the big river, where his mother would meet him. It was easy. And pretty soon, after he had looked at a lot of boats, some with huge sails and some with big stovespikes sticking through their roofs, he walked out into the city of the circus. His mother was not there, it seemed, and Willie set out to find her. He thought the best way to do so was to walk up a street and meet her. He did not know that he had taken the wrong ferry.

Willie was astounded by the high houses. He stood by the side of one that towered into the sky, and nearly fell over backward before he saw a hazy form far above that must have been the top.

But Willie was hunting his mamma. He looked at every woman he saw, thinking mother would soon come along. He really didn't know there were so many women in the world.

As mamma didn't show up, Willie wandered along, gazing at things in general. It wasn't dark yet.

Packed in Rush Train.

He no longer knew thing, such as they don't have in Paterson. It was a railroad on stilts. Willie saw people going up a staircase to it and following. Pretty soon a man asked him for a nickel, which he paid. It was simple to get in the train. They were jamming it with the evening uptown rush, and Willie was packed in. He saw many sights on that ride. House roofs, washings on the roofs, roofs, and still more roofs. Then the cry of "all out" aroused him. He asked the guard if he had seen mamma, but the guard hadn't.

Willie rode on another train to the South Ferry, where somebody told him he could get the ferry to Jersey. Jersey had a sweet sound about that time.

Still, however, there was more trouble for Willie. He told a reporter about it to-day, just after he had eaten a chicken breakfast with the Children's Society in Brooklyn.

Got Adrift on Ferry.

"I didn't know there were so many ferries," he said, "but I know now. You see, I got the wrong one and landed somewhere else. I guess I was crying, and, maybe, sleeping, too, when the policeman took me down there by that Hamilton street ferry place. Yes, we have policemen in Paterson. Well, I couldn't seem to find anything. I got about the circus, but say, I will come back. Maybe when father comes after me to-day he will go with me to the circus. I never saw a good one."

A policeman of the Hamilton avenue station found Willie last midnight, a forlorn little chap, crying heartily for his mother and his native streets. Henry McCrum, a prosperous mechanic, came to get his son this morning.

SANDY HOOK BOATS TO RUN.

New Jersey Authorities Will Not

Stop Vessels This Summer.

It is announced to-day that by reason of an agreement between Attorney-General McArthur, of New Jersey, and the Jersey Central Railroad, the Sandy Hook boat service of the railroad will continue this year as usual.

Litigation affecting the piers where the steamers landed at Atlantic Highlands, threatened to cause their suspension, but at a conference held last evening between the contending parties it was arranged that the suits to compel the company to vacate its title leading to the piers will be postponed till the season closes.
